Supt. Betsy Hamilton recalls the Rodney King unrest 28 years ago. “It was shocking to many that the videotaped reality of hostility and violence against officer’s knee on my neck.” He calls on education communities to be a beacon of hope. “We can use the power of education to transform, inspire and transcend the racial, cultural and socioeconomic disparities that have divided this country for far too long.”

“We are the children/We are the ones who make a brighter day.” These lyrics inspired a panel of experts, including a former deputy assistant of education to President Obama, to discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, June 18 Webinar on Educational Equity, will discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, which is being offered by the Los Angeles County Office of Education (LACOE) and the USC Race and Equity Center, will be held on June 18 at 2 pm and moderated by Greater LA Civic Learning resources may be found on our Democracy School web page.

RISING TO THE CHALLENGE

Don’t forget, LACOE is regularly updating several pages of resources for Families & Schools, Civic Learning resources may be found on our Democracy School web page, Civic Ed: Shining the Light on Social Issues, Unrest a Wake-Up Call to End Systemic Bias, Racism

Civics education can help shift the conversation from hate and violence to understanding and respect, and bring about positive change. It can shine the light on critical issues, such as racism and inequality, helping students understand and respond by taking informed action to effect change.

African Americans was not enough to bring about justice,” she says. As injustice.

Systemic racism and educational inequities have severely impacted our African American students. For decades, they have lagged behind their peers in academic achievement. We recognize the time has come to take action that demonstrates unequivocally that we understand the impact of systemic racism and take action to address it.

A panel of experts, including a former deputy assistant of education to President Obama, to discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, June 18 Webinar on Educational Equity, will discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, which is being offered by the Los Angeles County Office of Education (LACOE) and the USC Race and Equity Center, will be held on June 18 at 2 pm and moderated by Greater LA Civic Learning resources may be found on our Democracy School web page.

RISING TO THE CHALLENGE

Don’t forget, LACOE is regularly updating several pages of resources for Families & Schools, Civic Learning resources may be found on our Democracy School web page, Civic Ed: Shining the Light on Social Issues, Unrest a Wake-Up Call to End Systemic Bias, Racism

Civics education can help shift the conversation from hate and violence to understanding and respect, and bring about positive change. It can shine the light on critical issues, such as racism and inequality, helping students understand and respond by taking informed action to effect change.

African Americans was not enough to bring about justice,” she says. As injustice.

Systemic racism and educational inequities have severely impacted our African American students. For decades, they have lagged behind their peers in academic achievement. We recognize the time has come to take action that demonstrates unequivocally that we understand the impact of systemic racism and take action to address it.

A panel of experts, including a former deputy assistant of education to President Obama, to discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, June 18 Webinar on Educational Equity, will discuss actions to support black students and promote educational equity in the context of the pandemic. The webinar, which is being offered by the Los Angeles County Office of Education (LACOE) and the USC Race and Equity Center, will be held on June 18 at 2 pm and moderated by Greater LA Civic Learning resources may be found on our Democracy School web page.